The Test of Battle: The American Expeditionary Forces in the Meuse-Argonne Campaign

Paul F. Braim

during this revised edition, Dr. Paul Braim analyzes the background of the Meuse-Argonne Campaign, the main major problem to the Yank Expeditionary Forces (AEF) in global conflict I. Delving into newly obtained sources, he info the good problems encountered by means of the fledgling AEF, despatched to struggle in cooperation with Allies in France. Deployed to France from a military rapidly increased twenty occasions over its peacetime strength, the AEF used to be compelled to arrange a theater of operations, educate the loads of hundreds of thousands of arriving United States troops, and dedicate its partly knowledgeable forces into conflict prematurely. Braim recounts the dedication of the lesser knowledgeable infantrymen of the AEF into positions for an important offensive into the Meuse-Argonne, the "test of battle" for the Americans in France. His description of the awful combating inspires the sounds and scents of front-line battle, because the military drove north in the course of the robust defenses within the Meuse-Argonne sector, and won a bloody victory at the heights overlooking Sedan. Braim analyzes this expensive victory by means of inadequately proficient and inexpertly led forces as "learning to struggle via fighting!"
